What's mine is.....His!
Leigh Brannon

When I was little, going to McDonald's for a Happy Meal was a huge treat. One exciting Saturday, Daddy and I were eating lunch there, and I was as happy as a lark with my little cheeseburger (no pickle), fries, coke and a 5-cent prize. That all change though, when Daddy asked me for a fry. I was shocked and perplexed! Those were my fries. Surely he could see that! He was a grown-up -- he could control his potato cravings! Then he gently asked me, "You wouldn't give your daddy one little fry when he bought them for you in the first place?"

He had me there. How could I dream of being stingy with the man who gave me, well, everything? Of course I offered him the fry and several more.

As I've grown, that McDonald's incident has remained with me, and I now realize a spiritual application. I'm still that kid with the Happy Meal, but this time God is sitting across from me. He asks me not for a french fry, but maybe an hour to spend encouraging a sister going through a difficult situation. He might ask for $20 to provide school supplies for children who cannot afford to buy their own. I balk at first: Isn't God all-powerful? Can't he do it with his own resources? He has more power and knowledge than I can even fathom.

Then he asks me, "You wouldn't give an hour to the one who grants you a lifetime? You wouldn't give a few dollars to the one who enables you to earn a living?"

He has me there. All I "have" is his- I am his. How can I hold on to what was given to me in an incredible act of love? I am honored that he should share so much with me. Am I honoring him by my use of these gifts?

I'd like to say that since that Saturday years ago I've been the epitome of generosity. But being human, you know that isn't quite true. Now when I start to hold tightly to what is "mine," I see that look in my daddy's eyes, lovingly asking me to be a better person...and I relax my grip.
